IRI has supported the development of democratic institutions across the South Asia region through programs that amplify diverse voices, expand political space, and foster accountable relationships.

Due to the growth of programming across the South Asia region, it is highly beneficial for IRI to contract a facilitator and local expert on the ground who will support the implementation of in-country programming, assist in monitoring and evaluation of program activities, and travel as needed to attend and coordinate logistics for program activities, events, and training missions across the region, as well as provide updates based on political developments.

- Draft a report summarizing and analyzing the training programs. These reports must follow an IRI-provided template and contain the following:

- Date and location of the activity
- Number of participants broken down by party affiliation and gender
- Summary of the activity (i.e. agenda, sequence of events, topics of discussion)
- Analysis of success and impact of the activity
- Noteworthy quotes from participants
- Follow-up interviews with select participants
- Secure logistical preparations for visiting trainers and program staff including transportation arrangements, hotel reservations and venue preparation.
- Liaise with IRI program partners and political parties and communicate problems/concerns of program partners that might arise to IRI staff.
- Send weekly political updates and monthly programmatic reports via email to IRI's South Asia team in Washington, DC. The weekly political updates and monthly programmatic reports must follow IRI-provided templates.
