

Survey of Syrian Refugees in Lebanon

May 10 – June 10, 2012

Survey Specifications

- The International Republican Institute (IRI) conducted the survey using a trusted public opinion research firm with extensive regional experience. Field work occurred from May 10 – June 10, 2012, in the districts of Akkar, Tripoli and Baalbeck which are located in the Bekaa and North governorates of Lebanon.
- The sample for the survey was drawn from statistics from the United Nations Refugee Agency UNHCR. UNHCR reported 19,068 registered individual refugees as of May 10, 2012, with an additional 3,000 awaiting registration. Estimates, based upon mapping for this survey, suggest the total refugee population in these areas of Lebanon was nearer to 40,000.
- The survey was conducted by face-to-face interview and utilized a skip pattern to select respondents in areas where refugees are residing. Field teams first mapped the location (neighborhood/building/dwelling) where refugees are residing; and then developed an estimate of the number of refugees in each area. Field teams estimated the number of refugees (n) and divided the number of residents in the location by (n) to create a skip pattern. For example, if 375 were estimated as residing in a neighborhood or school,  $375/n$  was used to calculate the skip pattern used to select respondents. Respondents were aged 18 years and older.
- The total number of respondents was 1,188. Although 1,188 questionnaires were successfully completed, one out of every two initially selected respondents declined to be interviewed; many citing concerns over personnel safety.
- The survey's margin of error is +/- 2.8 percent.
- Data collection occurred during a spike in Lebanese factional fighting, linked to the crisis in Syria, which resulted in significant numbers of dead and wounded. This fighting caused delays in the data collection as accessing certain areas became prohibitively difficult and dangerous.
- Approximately 30 percent of interviews were back-checked following the completion of field work as a quality control measure. Back checking yielded a zero error rate on interviews checked.
- The information in this report has been compiled in accordance with international standards for market and social research methodologies. Figures in charts and tables may not sum to 100 percent due to rounding error.
