

Bosnia and Herzegovina: Attitudes on Violent Extremism and Foreign Influence

January 4 - February 3, 2017

Detailed Methodology

- The survey was conducted by Ipsos in Bosnia and Herzegovina (BiH) on behalf of the International Republican Institute's Center for Insights and Survey Research, and was funded by the National Endowment for Democracy.
- Data was collected between January 4 and February 3, 2017 through face-to-face interviews at the respondents' homes using the CAPI method (computer assisted personal interviewing).
- A total of 1,537 interviews were completed, with an overall margin of error of plus or minus 2.5 percent at the midrange of the 95 percent confidence level. A nationally-representative sample was assembled based on a multistage stratification proportionate to population sample distribution, through the random selection of households and respondents.
- The sample is composed of citizens of BiH, aged 18 and older and was based on the 2013 Census; Vital Statistics 2012 and Ipsos estimations derived from the Central Election Commission database; Agency for Identification Documents; and the Registers and Data Exchange of Bosnia and Herzegovina database.
- The sampling frame consisted of polling station territories (approximate size of census units) within strata defined by municipalities and type of settlements (urban and rural). Polling station territories enable the most reliable sample selection, due to the fact that these units represent the most comprehensive and up-to-date data available.
- Households were selected according to the random route technique. Starting from a given address, interviewers selected the third house down the same side of the street or the next available house for an interview from the starting point. From there, house numbers were followed in ascending order down the right side of the street, and interviewers selected every third house number. At every cross-road, interviewers turned right and continued with this pattern. In the case of apartment buildings, interviewers were permitted to select two apartments in buildings of four or less floors and three apartments in buildings of five or more floors (unless the building is in a village in which case only two apartments may be selected).
- Respondents were selected using the "Kish method".
